TASHA ROBITAILLE

Aanii! My name is Tasha Robitaille and I am a bilingual Métis Doula of Ojibway Cree descent and the Coordinator of the Biidaaban Doula Collective at Chigamik Community Health Centre. I have always been interested in Indigenous health and have gravitated towards traditional Indigenous births and loss healing support. I have been involved in providing maternal support for several years including postpartum care, breastfeeding support and wellness coaching. I thrive on nurturing and educating women through their pregnancy and postpartum journeys and I look forward to focusing my Doula practice on birth, postpartum, loss, and Eco Baby consultations. All of my services are offered in both French and English.

I have a Bachelor of Sciences and Kinesiology and a Masters in Environment and Sustainability. I have worked in various fields including Indigenous health, socio-economic consulting, community development, wellness coaching and employment counselling. I have furthered my education to complete the Maternal Support Training through Bebo Mia, I am a certified Eco-Baby Specialist and I continue to attend training and conferences, in line with my purpose.

I am mom to a beautiful little girl on earth and another baby in spirit. When I am not supporting families as a Doula or being fascinated by birth and babies, I am looking for ways to feel free, cozy, calm and creative! This usually includes grabbing a cozy blanket, lighting a candle, doing a craft or being out in nature.
